

Are you prepared for a power outage?

Fall weather in Southcentral Alaska is anything but predictable. Severe windstorms and early snowfall often result in downed trees, damage to powerlines, and a cluster of outages. One thing we can predict: You won't regret being prepared for a power outage. Now is a good time to evaluate your family emergency plan.

When severe weather is in the forecast, keep your electronics charged and consider getting a generator if you need power 24/7.

Experts recommend keeping a five-to-seven-day supply of emergency items conveniently located. For more information go to www.ready.gov.

In the community: Trunk or Treat

Chugach transformed the Chevy Silverado EV's frunk into a vampire bat for the Arc of Anchorage's Trunk or Treat fundraiser on September 13. The display was designed to educate members about "vampire loads"—devices that continue to draw electricity even when we think they are off. Hundreds of children and families stopped by for candy and hot chocolate, which was made with power from the EV.

From Engineering to Operations to Member Services, all of Chugach's roughly 450 employees live and work in Alaska.

Each month we introduce you to one of our employees who works every day to provide safe, reliable power to our members.

Name: Jake Moe

Position: Dist. Design Manager

Time at Chugach: 18 years

Jake says his proudest accomplishment at work is managing an engineering team that designs millions of dollars a year of distribution improvements and line extensions.

If you're heading out of town during the holiday season, remember to set your home to vacation mode. You can save energy while you're away by lowering the temperature on your thermostat and water heater. Small actions can also stack up to energy savings, such as unplugging devices that consume energy when they're not in use.
